

Mapping Transnational Women's Movements

Globalizing the Local, Localizing the Global

Amrita Basu, a leading expert on women's issues, examines how "globalization" has influenced feminist and other women's movements, what new opportunities have emerged and what new tensions have surfaced. First tracing the relationship between Robin Morgan's "Sisterhood is Global" of the 1960s and 70s and the transnationalism of the 90s, Basu then anticipates the new century examining local reaction to globalization and the resulting interaction between the global and the local. She concludes her presentation with a more detailed look at the women's movement in India.
