

A Filmmaker's Journey

From East St. Louis to
Hollywood to Cyberspace

Warrington Hudlin has long been recognized as a pioneer in the black independent cinema movement. Born and raised in East St. Louis, he graduated from Yale in 1974; the documentary Black at Yale: A Diary soon followed. In addition to producing feature films, including House Party, Boomerang and Bebe's Kids, he works with digital film and the Internet. An activist as well, Hudlin co-founded the Black Filmmakers Foundation and DVREpublic.com to provide awareness of and support for an ethnically diverse cinema.
