A Global Perspective on Development and Gender Equity

Today, homelessness, militarism, environmental degradation, and disease are widespread in affluent, industrialized countries as well as in the developing nations of the world. Certainly many people are aware of these global problems; yet too few are aware of the disproportionately devastating effects they have on the lives of women and children.

In their quest to create an enabling environment for people to enjoy long, healthy, and creative lives, architects, planners, and landscape architects, as well as those committed to social justice, must understand the complex ways in which these development, environmental, and housing policies further discriminate against women worldwide.
